Juror

Marge Dickinson

Marge Dickinson has spent 27 years teaching high school students and ended her career as a consultant to schools and colleges in Illinois, working on curriculum and assessment of work. In between, she founded the Galva Arts Council, a non-profit organization for the arts and served as President of the Illinois Art Education Association. She is familiar with a wide variety of art materials and the process needed to create and has judged numerous art show of amateurs and professionals.

“Originality is the key in creating works of art,” she says. “Artwork that shows the mind and heart of the artist is what draws me to a creative work. I like to see a work that is unique to the artist and belonging to just that artist, a vision that is original. I want to feel the person behind the work. Craftsmanship is an important component of successful work. It shows you care.

I am looking forward to seeing the work in the show and enjoying the talent of each person who has entered work. This art show is a wonderful example of the originality of the members and friends.”
